A group of House conservatives on Thursday filed two amendments to repeal and replace ObamaCare, outlining a conservative approach that would entirely eliminate the law. Republican leaders have staked out a politically palatable ground on repealing ObamaCare, but conservatives, led by Freedom Caucus members, have pushed to provide a conservative replacement that does away with some of the law's most popular provisions. The conservative replacement would eliminate taxes, subsidies, the essential health benefits, and ObamaCare's Independent Payment Advisory Board. However, it would keep in place some unpopular provisions, including the individual mandate, protections for pre-existing conditions, and allowing young people to stay on their parents' insurance. "We're not here to repeal and replace the same bill," Rep. Jim Jordan (R-Ohio), a leader of the conservative conference's efforts, told reporters. "We're saying: 'Let's repeal the whole thing. Let's start over.'" "We're not going to be limited by the things we talked about last year," Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.), chairman of the House Freedom Caucus, told reporters. The two amendments come as Republicans are working to coalesce around a replacement bill, something that's been elusive since July when lawmakers failed to pass a repeal-only measure. Republican leaders have given up any hope of this week passing a health care bill before a Sept. 30 deadline. The Senate has voted to move forward with a narrow ObamaCare repeal bill that would not repeal ObamaCare's taxes. A repeal bill with no replacement plan could face serious hurdles, including problems passing muster with the Congressional Budget Office, and would face certain defeat in the Senate. Republicans have been meeting at a retreat in Baltimore all week, getting feedback on their proposal and coming up with ways to improve it. Republicans are waiting until the fall to replace ObamaCare, even though their replacement plan is nearly ready, according to a GOP leadership aide. "There is a desire by many Republicans to repeal and replace at the same time," GOP leadership aide. "That has to be carefully planned, orchestrated and implemented. Republicans are not going to have a repeal-only Novel nuclear reaction (NMR) in endometrial tissue as an adjunct to endometrial biopsy. The aim of the present study was to determine whether a novel, non-invasive nuclear reaction (NMR) reaction occurs in endometrial tissue by simple visual observation by the pathologist. Archival endometrial biopsies obtained from 100 women between the ages of 41 and 47 years who had never been pregnant, presented with primary dysmenorrhoea or secondary dysmenorrhoea after ovulation induction therapy, which had been suspected as the cause of their menorrhagia. In the 100 women studied, histopathological evaluation of endometrial biopsies showed, in addition to typical endometrial change, 61 patients with active endometrial proliferative phase, 10 patients with proliferative endometrial phase, 7 patients with secretory endometrial phase, and 2 patients with inactive endometrial phase. The NMR reaction was found in 68% of patients with the active endometrial proliferative phase and in the remaining patients with the inactive endometrial phase. The negative predictive value of the NMR reaction (active endometrial proliferative phase vs. inactive endometrial phase) was 0.98 (0.96-0.99). In conclusion, the NMR reaction may be a useful ancillary technique to help differentiate between endometrial activity in patients with postmenopausal or premenopausal active endometrial proliferative phase.
