Full support for multi-platform automation - from Linux to Windows to MacOS to PalmOS. iMacros can work with any device that supports WebKit (including iPhone, iPod touch, iPad, Samsung SmartTV, ...). iMacros creates its own rules for matching web page elements, which it then stores for use in later iMacros sessions. This allows you to avoid errors when you return to previously visited sites. With the iMacros for Silverlight form filler, you can create a simple form that you can build with any software/HTML editor of your choice. The form filler will be installed on a new profile for your browser, so you can easily use it within a web site without installing additional software. iMacros supports multiple forms per website. This is required for sites with multiple login forms. When you select a form, iMacros will validate its form fields, build a script, and submit it to the website. In a regular installation of iMacros Enterprise, you can enter two hotkeys to launch your most frequently used macros - "F11" to launch iMacros Browser, "F3" to launch iMacros Browser with the current frame selected, and "Ctrl+F3" to launch iMacros Browser with the current frame selected. If you want to call a macro from a program or script, for example, use the iimPlay() function (including the number of frames to play for the current version of iMacros) to execute a macro. Finally, you can store a singlehotkey to a macro (currently limited to the F11 hotkey) using the iimSetHotkey() function. You can program the macro to do more than just launch iMacros. For example, you could pop up a message box that contains the text of the active frame, or you could run a macro (or launch a macro) when the currently active document is changed. You could also do a lot more, but these are just a few ideas.
