the main barriers to timely reporting of outbreaks were insufficient human resources, lack of knowledge, and inadequate training. poor understanding of roles led to delay in reporting and responding to outbreaks. other reasons for delayed response were the engagement of district lever workers in multiple programmes and delayed reporting of epidemics from the field.

lack of motivation and recognition were barriers to satisfactory performance. we recommend adequate workforce, guidelines regarding roles and responsibilities, practical hands-on training, simplifying the field-based reporting systems, engagement with the communities, and incentives to field workers for early reporting. we can replicate the lessons from other low-middle income countries to improve response to outbreaks [2]. at the district level, establishing the emergency operations center (eoc), strengthening the field epi training, and forming rrt with clearly defined structure and roles will improve outbreak response. practical guide to vegetable oil processing, second edition, includes an up-to-date summary of the basic principles of edible oil refining, processing, and deodorizing, serving as a hands-on training manual for chemists, engineers, and managers new to the industry. practical guide to vegetable oil processing, second edition, includes an up-to-date summary of the basic principles of edible oil refining, processing, and deodorizing, serving as a hands-on training manual for chemists, engineers, and managers new to the industry. a definite role of pfoa in the occurrence and life cycle of melamine is not yet known but its low toxicity and long environmental half-life suggest that the low concentration of pfoa in milk after melamine contamination of milk powder is still unlikely to be a primary reason for the occurrence of the melamine contamination. 5ec8ef588b
