if you only want to add new settings, you should first open the revupreferences.xml file in a text editor and add merge=true to the beginning of the file as shown below, before staging it for deployment. after you have made all your edits, delete all the other settings that you do not want to change. the microsoft windows installer (msi) is a deployment and installation tool from microsoft. when you create an msi for revu, you are configuring it for a client-side deployment. a traditional msi will prompt the user to select a location where the program will be installed, or you can specify that a standard location such as %programfiles% or %programfiles% will be used. an msi can also be deployed through an unattended setup. the msi contains a manifest.xml file that contains information about your installation, including the location and version of revu. an msi also contains information about what files and components will be installed. during deployment, msi files contain a list of components that are being installed. the components are the files and programs that will be installed. for example, an msi contains a list of components that are being installed. these components are then listed in the table below. bluebeam offers two ways to implement application licensing: license manager and bluebeam licensing server. bluebeam licensing server is the recommended licensing solution for a revu deployment because it is capable of creating and managing all licenses for revu automatically. to implement licensing, you need to specify the installation parameters. bluebeam licensing server is included in the revu distribution as a prerequisite for the installation of revu. if you do not wish to use bluebeam licensing server, you can opt to install the license manager to create and manage licenses. license manager is installed with the bluebeam revu installation and can be used for personal or commercial usage.
