As a proof of concept, I sent the corrupted.pptx file to myself and the corrupted.pptx file to a colleague, neither of whom had think-cell installed. Both were able to open the.pptx file and edit the chart, even though both I and my colleague did not have think-cell installed. As I have mentioned in previous posts that think-cell is one of those Excel add-ins you don't realise they have until you stop using it. As users we are all aware that Excel is a great tool for creating chart, and there are so many great charts out there for us to re-create. However, the majority of users either do not have the time to create these charts themselves, or they are not very good at doing so. I'm always asked to create the graphs or charts for presentations, however I don't have the time to do so myself. think-cell makes life much easier. If you are one of those users who are finding it difficult to create charts and graphs, then think-cell is a real cost-cutting tool. Until a few years back, think-cell was only available as a stand-alone product, which meant you had to purchase it every time you wanted to create a new chart. Now that you can get think-cell as part of Excel, you can save yourself a little cash. If you are like most PowerPoint users, then you will be aware that often you only use the most basic features of a chart, and not all the chart functions. think-cell has more features, however, if you need to create a chart you will only need a few rows of data to show. When it comes to adding charts to your Microsoft PowerPoint presentation, think-cell is one of the easiest charting add-ins available. It makes the chart creation process extremely easy, and it means that you can quickly produce a chart without any problems.
